

ABSTRACT

A network is provided comprising at least one access point and one access-controlling node whereby the identity of the station can be approved by the access-controlling node. The at least one access-controlling node issues at least one Inter-Access Point Protocol message causing the access point with which the station is currently associated to disassociate the given station thereby terminating the access for the given station.